TWO ATTEMPTS TO KILL HIMSELF.

The State to which Dr. Brink has Brought Louis Thomsen, of Astoria.

A year ago Louis Thomsen, a German, was arrested in Astoria, Ore., for attempting to murder his wife, drawing a knife across her throat.

The physician thought that he could not recover. Thomsen was arrested and committed to the Queens County Insane Asylum. On Monday last he was discharged. His wife had learned of his discharge, and, fearing he would again attack her, she packed up all the furniture and removed it to this city, where she is now residing.

When Thomsen returned to his home, he was astonished to find it deserted. A search he found his wife living with relatives in the city. He promised to reform, and appealed to her to return with him to Astoria. She refused to do so.

Thomsen then returned to his home, and found it deserted. A search he found his wife living with relatives in the city. He promised to reform, and appealed to her to return with him to Astoria. She refused to do so.

FATHER O'CONNOR'S BATTLE.

The Saloon Keepers' Vote to Keep His Door Open All Day Sunday.

NEWARK, July 25.—This evening thirty liquor sellers of East Newark assembled in Frank McLynden's saloon in Harrison avenue to decide upon some course concerning Sunday selling. Brewer Peter Hauk was present.

First—That our places of business shall hereafter remain closed on Sunday from 12 o'clock Saturday night till 12 o'clock noon, and from 6 P. M. until 12 o'clock at night.

Second, That any liquor dealer or saloon keeper who violates this, the aforesaid agreement, will receive neither our support nor defense if prosecuted at any time for the violation of the State law relative to the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Alderman Frank Corley moved to adopt the resolution, but the motion was not seconded, and the resolution was laid aside. An expression of opinion was then called for. Chairman Hauk said the saloon men must do something to save their business.

He said that the saloon men must do something to save their business. He said that the saloon men must do something to save their business. He said that the saloon men must do something to save their business.

RIGGED FOR SURE DEATH.

JANITOR HOLMES CONSTRUCTS A SUICIDE APPARATUS.

Two Pistols Placed him, and the Gun that he Expected to Fire Into Himself After he was Headed Off to His Room.

Julius Holweg, janitor of the double tenement house 154 Norfolk street, was an expert apparatus-maker of an east side schutzen corps. He was a tall, stout Prussian, with a big head, long flaxen hair, and a heavy moustache. He was in perfect bodily health, and loved to drink beer and smoke his pipe in the neighboring saloon, where the tenants met to play pool and talk about the German Emperor. Twenty-three years ago he married in Prussia, and seven years ago he came to this city with his wife and his son. He had been noted at home for his skill as a hunter, and brought with him his single-barreled gun. When he got his place as janitor his wife became sick, and he took her to a doctor. Evidently, the son, worked as a waiter in the saloon.

Holweg had owned a saw mill abroad, and had been a person of consideration in Genthin, Prussian Saxony. He fell into poverty, and that was why he emigrated. He was melancholy, and his wife was ill. He was a Prussian, and he was a Prussian.

CROWLEY, THE CHIMPANZEE.

The Abominable Relations that Exist Between Him and His Keeper.

Crowley, the chimpanzee, is drawing big houses. From early morning, when Jake Cook, his keeper, arrives Tom Donohue, the night keeper, and opens the monkey house, men, women, and children are looking at him.

"Yes," said Jake Cook, "there never has been such an attraction here before. Why, I have had them from Chicago, Boston, and Philadelphia. I have had all nationalities, and I may say, professions. I have had artists, who wanted to give Crowley free sittings; photographers, doctors, scientists, showmen, and I don't know how many others."

Crowley was talking, and Crowley was rocking himself in his chair, keeping his large brown eyes upon his keeper, and acted as if he were trying to understand what Cook was saying.

"Come, Crowley, and let me see you lay and take a walk. Look there, back the cage door, and with a little scream of pleasure, Crowley hopped out of his chair and pulled his large body around Cook's neck and pressing his cheek to Cook's, allowed the man to carry him out like a dog."

"I wouldn't let him walk in the house," said Cook, "because the monkeys are so jealous of him. They would kill him if they could. Why, the other day I was coming along with Crowley in my arms, when that bouncer of a monkey saw me, and he was so angry, he wouldn't let me go. He was so angry, he wouldn't let me go. He was so angry, he wouldn't let me go."

Crowley was talking, and Crowley was rocking himself in his chair, keeping his large brown eyes upon his keeper, and acted as if he were trying to understand what Cook was saying.
